A highly acclaimed opera conductor, Lü has led over fifty productions so far internationally. As the first Asian conductor appointed as Music Director in an important opera house in Italy, he has been praised by critics as “a conductor who has a deeper understanding of Italian operas than the Italians themselves do.” In 1989, he was awarded both the First Prize and Jury’s Prize at the Antonio Pedeotti International Conducting Competition in Trento, Italy. In 2007, the Italian President bestowed the “President's Prize” on Lü for his exceptional contribution to Italian culture. That same year, the production of "La gazza ladra" by Gioachino Rossini that he conducted at the Rossini Opera Festival, held in Pesaro, the composer's hometown, was voted “Opera Production of the Year” in Europe and it was released as a DVD from Dynamic. In 2008, he became music director of the Macao Orchestra. He is currently the chief conductor of the China National Center for the Performing Arts Orchestra.
